

Koshi Tappu Wildlife Reserve

Nepal - Extension Options

Koshi Tappu Wildlife Reserve is one of the finest birdwatching and wildlife areas in all Asia. Located in southeast Nepal, the reserve covers 175 square kilometres with large expanses of open water created by the Koshi barrage, with marshes, lagoons, sandbanks and mudflats offering an outstanding wetland habitat. The reserve is home to over 500 species of birds, with the resident inhabitants being joined by large numbers of migratory species from Siberia and Tibet, which take up residence from November to February. The Koshi Tappu Wildlife Reserve provides one of the best places in Nepal to view migratory water fowl, waders and shore birds with many species seen here which are not recorded elsewhere in the region.

There is also much wildlife to be seen in Koshi Tappu including Blue bull, Golden jackal, Bengal fox, Fishing cat, Jungle cat, mongoose, civet, porcupine, Indian flying foxes as well as rare Gangetic dolphins and Marsh Mugger crocodiles. In addition, Koshi Tappu is the last habitat of the endangered Arna, a type of wild water buffalo.

During your visit you will explore the park on a range of wildlife watching activities including a gentle rafting trip on the Koshi River, nature walks and jeep drives. You will also have the opportunity to visit a family in a nearby village for a taste of rural Nepalese life. You will stay at Koshi Camp which offers simple but comfortable accommodation and has an expert staff of naturalists and birdwatchers to give you a comprehensive introduction to this wonderful area.
